HYMN OF
FREE PEOPLES
TRIUMPHANT

Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon the earth,

*That the triumphing of the wicked is short,
and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment?*

Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds;

*Yet he shall perish forever like his own dung:
they which have seen him shall say, Where is he?*

He shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found: yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night.

I would seek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause

—Book of Job

HYMN OF FREE PEOPLES TRIUMPHANT

Out of the depths of defeat, thou hast raised us, O God!

Our enemies came upon us, like thieves
 they came,

Like waters that burst the sluice, like a down-storming flood,

 Like fire on the hills, flaunting to heaven
 the flame;

Out of the north like the invincible sea

 Pounding with breaker on pitiless
 breaker the shore;

H Y M N

Out of the night like a ravisher stealthily Tiptoeing up the stair to an unlocked door—

They crept, they came, they poured, they thundered, they beat.

We fell before them, like mowed grass
we went down.

They smote us, they slew us, they trampled us under their feet;

They stretched out their greedy hands;
to the coveted crown

They stretched out their terrible arms, bristling and vast.

H Y M N

And thou wert with us. They stormed.
And we stood fast.

Out of the arms of the grave, thou hast drawn us, O Lord!

We cried: "We will strike him here where his heart lies bare.

He called for the sword, now shall he die
by the sword!

Dreamer of dreams forbidden, we come,
beware!"

We came, we struck, we harried, we plunged on.

But the monster opened his arms, he opened them wide,

H Y M N

And in bogs and glades by craft were we undone,

And he drew us close in his terrible arms,
 and we died.

And he smote us again; in the lowlands,
 seeking the sea,

By the dunes and the dikes, charging,
 he came in his pride!

And we called the fetterless ocean to strike
 for the free,

We called our brother the sea to fight at our side!

And the deep sea covered the fields as men
cover the dead.

And the foe came on through the waters
and floundered and fell;

And again he came on, singing, with lifted head,

And sank; and again he came on through the terrible

Waters of death, and we met him, and hand to hand

Fought in the ruins of homes; in the storm and the cold

We grappled, we thrust, we stabbed
through that wild lost land;

And "Calais!" he cried, and "Calais!" the echo rolled.

To the ruins and blood-red waters came quiet at last.

For thou wert with us. He faltered. But we stood fast.

Out of the Valley of Death, Lord, thou hast led us!

By the sea we lay panting with burning eyes;

By the dunes, by the flooded fields, where the wind fed us

Despair, and day was blacker with surmise

Than ever night with storms, we crouched;
 but lo,
 On the plains afar, on the brown fields,
 facing the west,
Not of dismay and imminent overthrow,
 Through the day, through the dark, we made a spectral guest; God, how we came with banners! With drums, we came!
 Flashing the sun back, sparkling, we came on!
Our enemy fled. Down the gray gorge of shame
 He drew away as the dark draws away from the dawn.

H Y M N

We cried, "Now, he is ours!" but lo, in the north,

Like a new spear flashing, he sprang;
again; again!

And back and forth we lunged; and back and forth

Like wrestlers with bloodshot eyes who heave and strain

At the abyss's edge, we tossed panting; we sprang back;

Grappled, recoiled; grappled again; lay still;

Arms locked, eye to red eye demoniac;
Limbs lax; astir only the invincible will.

And again by the white peaks, bugles and victory-laughter,

Legions of marching men, files without end!

Death on the winding roads; slaughter,
and triumph after!

Biting winds on the passes and April after
Where the winding roads descend.

God, how we came with banners! God, how they fled,

Crag to crag, leaping, stricken, down the gray slopes!

We crashed upon them like waters bursting their bed,

Like churning waters, whirling away their hopes.

“At last! At last! Now is the end!” we cried.

But our enemy thrust from the dark;
terribly he thrust.

And we melted like snow from the gay,
green mountain-side;

To the icy passes we fled like windblown dust.

And the foe plunged and came on; with thunder and flame

He cut him a highway and paved it with bones and blood;

H Y M N

Of eyes and palpitant hearts that knew thy name,

God, and knew love and beauty and fatherhood,

An instrument to batter a bastion low

He fashioned him there, God; and smote us.

Dear Lord,

Who knowest all things, this also thou
dost know;

Not lightly there we yielded to thy abhorred.

He lunged, he trampled, he plunged; he swept us aside.

H Y M N

We died, we rose from the dead, we died,
we died.

*God, in the Valley, in the silvery canyon of Death,
Thou gavest our lips water and our lungs
breath;
Thou gavest our eyes sweet pictures to gaze
upon;
Thou gavest our hearts sweet love to feed
upon;
Thou gavest our spirits music of thine own making,
Of daylight breaking,*

H Y M N

And slumbering birds and slumbering worlds awaking.

*Thou gavest our spirits food to eat,
Bread and apples, honey and meat,
And hands to clasp and fields to sow
And children to fondle, as long ago.*

Thou art home-fires to them who gave and are done with giving.

But a ring of ten thousand chariots thou art to the living!

God, in disaster thou hast been near to us.

We cried, "We will strike our foe by land and by sea;

H Y M N

In the narrow way, by the strait gate
perilous,
Where the black heart blasphemous
Camps and breaks bread with our Lord's black enemy,
We will make us a road; to his throat we will carve us a way!"

Over the sea, over the wine-dark sea,
From the ends of the earth with singing and banter gay
For the love of a ravished bride, sweet Liberty,

H Y M N

We came; and round us were spectres of dazzling ships;

And above us the charging and clashing
of clamorous ghosts;

And before us the deathless magic of Helen's lips

And the deep voice of Agamemnon calling his hosts.

Lemnos gave greeting, Samothrace a cheer,

And the ashes of Ilium sang as we drew near.

H Y M N

Lord God, thou knowest that we were glad
to die.

Our strength, our hope, our vision of far,
loved faces,
Of sweet years hand in hand and eye in eye,
And children and friends, old paths and familiar places,
Lord, these were all we had to give; we gave them;
Throwing away our dreams that we might save them.

H Y M N

We died in the sea, we died in the snares
of the beaches;

We died in the daffodils, when their cups
were red;

We died amid wails and singing and mad-men's screeches

And crawling fire and under the piled-up dead.

We landed, we stormed, we stabbed, we pressed on, we prevailed;

We hungered, we thirsted, we burned, we fell back, we failed.

H Y M N

God, in black days thou hast kept true to
us!

Our enemy laughed; he said, "They are babes at war.

What are they, to match their swords
presumptuous

With the sword of a conqueror?"

And he gathered his legions and smote us where we were weak.

With treachery and a sword, with guile
and a blow,

He fell on our fields like winter and left them bleak,

He came on our cities like Judgment and trampled them low.

H Y M N

We stood, we fought; by the river, black with his coming,

For a high price, we sold each drop of freemen's blood!

But our foe came on with his hordes and his vultures humming;

Like a glacier, darkly, like a slow-rising flood,

Like a plague of locusts that leaves the green fields brown,

He came; we fought in the valley, we poured death from the heights;

H Y M N

We defied the tide; the thunder we thundered down.

But he came as the dark comes, putting out the light;

He came as death comes, putting dreams to flight.

And we fled to the mountains, we fled with our loves in our arms;

Starving and bleeding, we staggered, with Terror behind

Flaring to heaven, and around us the whirling storms

And the snow on our loved ones lost and the pitiless wind.

H Y M N

But our foe cried, "Fools! that die for a phantom-light!
Shatter your hearts, if you must. I stand.
I am Might!"

H Y M N

II

God, in defeat, in the deluge of black defeat

Thou blewest upon our courage and kept it burning.

Thou wast a light along the blackened street;

By empty chairs a promise of returning.

Thou wast the sword of Liberty, agonizing,

Thou wast the still small voice in the battle's din:

“The wicked are caught in the snares of their own devising.

Faint not, fight on. Only the just shall win!”

Thou knowest, Lord, we fought and fainted not.

We suffered all things, hunger and cold
and pain,
Death with the huddled dead, and death,
forgot

In some lost crater alone with the dark and the rain;
Fever and endless obeying and digging and carrying
And slaughter and evil winds and gathering and burying.
We bore them all, for something, dim-
discerned,

That in our hearts like white auroras burned.

And our enemy ravaged our fields and ravished our treasures,

And he made our maidens and golden boys his slaves;

And he slaughtered our babes and took our wives for his pleasures,

And was king by the grace of volleys and open graves.

And he sent his vultures scattering death
at whim,

H Y M N

And his demon-ships to gather glory for him;
And the spirits of earth and air came at his nod
And blew green poisons to put out the eyes of God.

*Under the beak of black hours ravenous,
God of free peoples, Thou hast been true to us!*

H Y M N

III

And again our enemy gathered his legions, and struck.

With flashing of myriad thunders, crashing, he came on.

And the walls of our stronghold shuddered
and heaved and shook,

And the solid earth churned as the sea
in the muddy dawn;

And plunging out of the dark as the waves
of the sea,

Breaker on breaker, he charged the hills of the free.

And the waves came, broke and ebbcd, and other waves came.

Up from the infinite deep, up the wild shore

They climbed, they broke in a crackle of fierce flame;

They surged, they shuddered, they crumbled, they were no more.

And out of the wallowing ground like the dead, emerging,

Through the fog and the snow the gray-
green waves came surging.

H Y M N

And our bodies grew faint with slaying,
our eyes grew dim,

And our strong walls sprang in the air
and fell and were dust;

And nearer and nearer the hills' shot-shattered rim

The seething deep his terrible fingers thrust.

And giddy and sick we faced the charging mass.

"They shall not pass, dear God! They shall not pass."

HYMN

Friend of the free, when man's need barriers fall,

Thou art a wall, great Lord, thou art a wall!

And we struck our enemy, struck to east and to west.

Struck on the sea, struck in the huddled town.

The darkness we gave no sleep, the silence
no rest.

Pity no bed to lay her weariness down.
And the battle boiled and seethed and bubbled and fell

H Y M N

In the rocking cauldron over the coals of hell;
And the breath of a hundred valleys went out in thunder,
And a thousand villages crumbled and were stamped under;
And the strong were afraid and the weak
met death with a shout;
And gods, like an empty lamp, sputtered
and went out;
And shapes rose out of graves and dragged
at kings;
And hands in the dark broke the bright
bubbles of kings;

And loud and wild on the uttermost crags
and coasts

Ebbd and flowed the supplications of ghosts.

And hate the sower was choked by a world
of haters;

And monstrous offspring sprang on their own creators;

And high seats toppled and proud kings
begged for bread;

And golden banners flared to the dawn,
blood-red;

And nations died and nations rose from the dead.

H Y M N

And once more our enemy flung forth his legions; once more With thundering mouths and drums and clattering swords
And mad-eyed Terror with torches running before,
He came, he came with his hordes!

And he beat against us; with iron hands
from our heights
He hurtled us down; from our valleys on waves of blood,

Terribly on, through the days and the red nights
He swept us like a flood.

And the snake in the covert hissed, "Break and flee!"

And the jackal barked in the dark, "He hangs at your throat!"

But thy children lifted their heads, remembering thee,
And stood, and turned, and smote!

Lord God of high heaven, sword and shield of the free!

H Y M N

Splendor, defender of light and liberty!

Arms to the weak of arm, eyes to the dim
of eye,

Comfort and confidence to them that go
to die!

Confunder of tyranny, smiter of perfidy, Uplifter of burdens fallen on the way to thee!

Breaker of snares, blunter of swords,

Terror and turner of infidel hordes,

Pursuer of the foes of light, harrier of the unjust,

Trampler of the rebellious with hoofs in the dust!

H Y M N

Driver with whips, driver with scorpions,
Driver with thunders, terribler than guns, Dropper of bursting fire on the hearts of the proud,

Blower of biting death on the hopes of the haughty-browed—

Our enemy is shattered,

Our enemy is flown!

His charging hosts are scattered,

His towers are overthrown!

His trumpets trumpet vainly

To stay the last retreat.

The monstrous beast ungainly

Lies at thy conquering feet!

H Y M N

Redeemer of nations, burster of prison-gates;

Lifter from broken hearts of chains and weights;

Feeder of famished hearts, joiner of hands,

Returner of exiles from alien strands;

Bringer of morning, bringer of air,

Kindler of laughter in ashes of despair!—

Preserver! Glorious!

From the hills and the crashing sea,

Thy freemen, victorious,

Jubilantly run to Thee!

Not with shouting and singing,

Exultant trumpet or drum,

But with hearts like church-bells ringing,

Conqueror, we come!

Devouring fire, invincible light!

Builder of dawn on the ruins of night!

Builder with music of the crystal halls of day,

God, we are Thine! Command and we obey!
